Five years have passed since we destroyed Kildare. In the years since, the Urthmen threat has diminished, almost to the point of being bearable. I began to feel safe for the first time in my life, that my sister is safe, that mankind has a chance to advance, that a future exists. But I've learned that on this planet, nothing lasts, especially peace. And with the toll of a bell everything changes—Avery and her companions are faced with a new enemy more deadly than anything they've ever encountered, danger so deadly it threatens to destroy everything they've worked for and everyone they love. Will humankind be doomed to extinction once and for all? Find out in this heart-pumping final installment of the Planet Urth series.

More than two hundred years into the future, human beings are an endangered species. The planet has been battered by war, its inhabitants plagued by disease and death. Few humans survived and remained unaffected. Most changed dramatically and evolved into something else entirely. Irrevocable alterations caused by chemical warfare have created a new species. North America is in ruins and has been overtaken. Humanity has fallen at the hands of mutants known as Urthmen. Seventeen year-old Avery is alive and unchanged. But she has not been immune to the harshness of the new world. She has lived on the run for much of her life, in terror. After fleeing the only refuge she's known for much of her life, Avery, along with her sister June and new friends, Will, Oliver and Riley forge through the forest to uncharted territory in search of a better life, in search of other survivors. But Avery soon learns that life beyond the woods is far worse than she ever imagined. She finds that safety does not exist for human beings in a world run by Urthmen. Hope seems futile. But Avery refuses to surrender hope and chooses, instead, to push forward and move her group into the heart of danger, to seek out more humans. Will she and the others survive their journey into the savage lands of Planet Urth? Find out in this heart pumping second installment of the Planet Urth series.

In a world where society has fallen, where the last fragments of civilization are clinging to life by a thread and monsters roam the forests, fear is all Lucas and those closest to him have known. Every attempt at safety seems to fail. Without a plan and with waning hope, he flees the forest with nothing more than a full tank of fuel. He knows the world is no longer safe for humans. He believes there's nowhere to run, nowhere to hide. But a chance encounter with a stranger named Garan changes that belief, leading Lucas, Pike, Ara and all that travel with him on a journey to find a city that boasts humans and Urthmen living in harmony, free and safe from attacks. But will this new destination be a safe haven? Can Garan be trusted? Should Lucas place the fate of those closest to him in the hands of a stranger? Find out in this third installment of the Remains of Urth series. Remains of Urth: Sin City (Book 3)

Planet Urth (Book 1)The world has changed. It's dangerous, deadly. Inhuman creatures rule the planet. Animals have mutated. The land is hostile. But it's all I've ever known. Hunger. Fear. Panic. Those emotions are my reality. They are my every day. I am Avery, and I am seventeen. My father died a year ago. Since then I've been responsible for my eight-year-old sister, June. I worry we are the only humans left. Humans have been hunted for centuries, to the brink of extinction. I must fight each day to protect my sister. It is the reason I wake, the reason I breathe. But how long can I go on fighting? How long will it be before they find us? More than two hundred years into the future, human beings are an endangered species. They need to find fuel so that they can travel across the country to the underground city, to a place where humans live safely, free from the terrors above ground. But once they make it there, will it be the idyllic paradise they imagine it to be or will it be worse than the current nightmare in which they live?

If I fail my sister and we die, does our species die with us? Are we truly the last of our kind? How can we survive when every creature left on the planet seeks to destroy us? The world has changed. Avery thought she was living in a time of peace. She thought that her family and friends were finally safe and free to live a normal life. But all of that changed in the space of a breath. On the day of a celebration commemorating ten years of peace between Urthmen and humans, Avery's world explodes into chaos. Attacked and forced to flee Cassowary, she must fight to survive in hopes of finding her family. If they live...

Arianna Rose was never like other girls her age. She always knew she was different. But shortly after moving to a new town and starting a new school, she realizes her differences are far greater than she originally imagined. Suddenly empowered with seemingly supernatural abilities, Arianna struggles to discover the meaning behind their abrupt appearance. Arianna must learn to control her powers so she can protect herself from the evil forces that conspire against her.

Time is ticking down. I can't stay here any longer. I won't stay here any longer. I won't let my brother and sister live this life. I'd rather die trying to free them than spend another day here. The only problem is if we are successful there's nowhere to go. Nowhere to hide. Nowhere is safe. We are hunted, existing in a world that doesn't belong to us. But I still need to try. I'd rather die a free man than live in chains. Captured and forced into the arena after his village was stormed and his loved ones slaughtered, all that remains of Lucas's family are his sister, Ara, and his brother, Pike. He is determined to save them from the Urthman city in which they're prisoners, where humans are pitted against each other for sport. He will not watch them die on the sand. He will sacrifice his own life to free them. But is there a place for them in what remains of Urth? Find out in this second installment of the Remains of Urth series!
